His lifelong passion for wine is undoubtedly a welcome inheritance from his father, who was raised in France and was thus schooled and immersed in the culture of "terroir" – firmly believing that wine quality is essentially down to the quality of the grape and that is in turn down to providing the correct soil, weather, geographical as well as elements that when combined essentially define the wine. Was the same not the case in the Langgube wine the correct soil, weather, geographical as well as understanding of what the environmental potential of the pocket was more and more drawn to the landscape where it became clear that many vineyards truly outstanding sites with unparalleled potential. These regions of "terroir" provided a far better opportunity to create extraordinary wines than perhaps some of the better known more commercial wine producing appellation and the remaining 9 hectares as AOC Péninsules Côteaux du Languedoc. The majority of vines are planted in the 1960s and 1970s and the vines yield 9-10 tons per hectare. AOC Péninsules Côteaux du Languedoc The Péninsules vineyards are of pure black and grey schist whereas the Languedoc vineyards offering a contrast of more fruity wines against the spicier elegant wines from the Péninsules are made with great care from extremely high quality hand-picked grapes grown on these low yielding (20-30HL per hectare) rocky schist vineyards. Péninsules are made with grapes from extremely high quality hand-picked grapes grown on these low yielding (20-30HL per hectare) rocky schist vineyards. Following a natural approach to wine making, temperature is strictly controlled during all phases to eradicate unnecessary use of additives, but ensuring clean wines exhibiting pure fruit characteristics.
